Become an Expert in Tomorrow's Technology

UNC's Computer Information Systems (CIS) Emphasis is moving at the speed of technology. It will provide you with business knowledge, skills and practical experience in the CIS field, while providing the foundation for immediate employment and future advancement to management positions.

IT'S BUSINESS. AND IT'S PERSONAL.

Everyone at the Monfort College of Business (MCB) is committed to preparing you for a successful future in the business world. In fact, nearly all CIS graduates secure a job directly after graduation.

In addition to focused coursework and hands-on experience, MCB will help you develop connections for success through career and networking events that bring employers directly to campus. As a CIS graduate, your career choices will be plentiful and diverse. Graduates generally accept jobs as a programmer, analyst, networking professional, systems analyst, database administrator or data communications specialist, just to name a few. You'll be able to focus on creating and implementing software and procedures used to service large and small organizations including manufacturing, retail, wholesale, financial, insurance, communications and government groups.

"The thing I enjoy most about the CIS program, and MCB in general, is that you have so many opportunities to prepare yourself for life after college. Every day I work with the technology that I will be using in a business environment and I am able to work with professors who not only teach but also currently work in the CIS field. The CIS program has helped me feel prepared for whatever path I may take come graduation."
